5. India Untouched is a documentary which features the present scenario of certain villages in rural India where even today the caste system and untouchability are practiced. In the same documentary it has been shown as to how the common places of water sources in the village are also being discriminated upon. The upper caste can use the village wells and rivers at any time, but as far as the lower caste people are concerned, they cannot use the water sources freely and should maintain precaution while using these bodies (for example accessing the river and the well from a particular side only, not touching the water directly etc.). Considering the situation do you think that this is the ideal situation to be in. does our Constitution play any role in this situation? Can we say that the water laws cannot be implemented until and unless the Constitution of India has been strictly adhered to? Examine the situation with necessary examples and case laws.
6. How has the water law and its related policies in India have evolved with time? Discuss in detail with the major changes made in the past regarding water laws in India.
