Read the following Comprehension and answer the below asked questions In a small, peaceful village called Eldridge, between quiet hills and a clear, shining river that flowed far to the sea, lived a young inventor named Lila who loved new ideas. Each sunny morning, she walked slowly along the black stone roads, looking far ahead for good thoughts. One cloudy fall day, while checking her grandma's old attic	10 Marks	L3	CO4

full of lost things, Lila soon found a very old, dirty book with leather covers under stacks of pale letters and old photos.

"Wow!" said Lila happily, as beautiful drawings of amazing machines jumped out from the thin, faded pages. These smart devices, which made steady sounds like music from wheels and rods, offered fun trips no one could dream of. Quickly, she took the big book down the stairs, her heart beating fast with joy.

That same afternoon, in a short rain that tapped lightly on the metal roof, Lila built her big machine. She used strong copper wires, bright brass wheels, bright batteries, and strange stones from the river. Her strong hands moved fast and carefully, turning, joining, and fixing each small part well. But then, a naughty spark shot fast over the messy table, scaring the soft black cat, Midnight, who was resting close by.

"Oh no!" she cried in sadness, her voice shaking with upset as heavy smoke rose up and the machine stopped with a bad noise. Lila worried if her brave test had gone wrong, breaking her hopes again. Luckily, her smart old friend Theo, the blacksmith with rough hands and a kind smile, came right away with a noisy tool box and kind words that cheered her up fast.

Together, they fixed things slowly next to each other under a lantern's soft light, checking bad wires and making weak spots strong with new parts. Theo smartly said to add a safe pipe, while Lila tried new power from her big store. Time went by without notice as they talked softly, their laughs filling the work room.

At last, in the beautiful sunset when yellow light cut through the clouds, the great machine started with a happy sound, giving a calm, even light that lit up the whole place. Happy people from the village, who came outside after the noise, shouted with joy for the smart friends who changed sad loss into big win with strong will. From that special day on, Eldridge was full of new ideas; kids hoped big, grown-ups worked together with zeal, and old folks told past fun times.

Lila's machine, now shown proudly in the town center, made many others chase their loves without stop, showing clearly that hard work, friends, and new thoughts beat all hard problems in life's changing path.
